26. THE JOURNAL AND JOHN BOLES: THIRTY YEARS TOGETHER

PRESIDING: Randal L. Hall, Editor, Journal of Southern History

John B. Boles, describing the interaction between authors and the editors of the Journal of Southern History, once wrote, “Our joint aim is to publish the best article that the author is capable of, and we often receive heartfelt letters of thanks once the article is in print—which is the most gratifying aspect of editing.” For thirty years, from 1983 to 2013, Boles led the work of the Journal, and the entire discipline of southern history, not just the authors of those articles, has benefited from the high aspirations he described.

In this session, a dozen or so scholars have been invited to offer lively five-minute talks on an article or idea or experience related to the Journal during Boles’s tenure that influenced the speaker in a particularly significant way. Offering heartfelt thanks in person is the simplest and perhaps most gratifying way for the members of the Southern Historical Association to honor John Boles’s three decades of diligent editorial service
