1. OPENING NIGHT SESSION

FRAMING SOUTHERN HISTORY: REGION, NATION, HEMISPHERE, WORLD

In the opening night session, five accomplished scholars consider ways of situating the South—and southern history—in broader geographical contexts. In doing so, they initiate discussion of a topic that will receive further attention in several sessions of this year’s program, including Peter Kolchin’s presidential address on Friday night.

PRESIDING: Enrico Dal Lago, National University of Ireland, Galway

PANELISTS: Jane Landers, Vanderbilt University
Peter Coclanis, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill
Christina Snyder, Indiana University
Matthew Pratt Guterl, Brown University
Don Doyle, University of South Carolina

Following the session, the Local Arrangements Committee will host a reception welcoming us to Atlanta across the hall in Salon West.

Faculty at four colleges built assignments asking their students to research how slavery ended in their local area. The classes met virtually, sharing their results with each other and using Visualizing Emancipation (http://dsl.richmond.edu/emancipation), a map for viewing local episodes attending the Civil War and slavery's end, as a pivot and online publishing platform for their primary source research. This discussion, including participating faculty and some of their students, will share the results of the semester's experiment.

55. “JORDAN IS SO CHILLY”: AN ENCOUNTER WITH LILLIAN SMITH
A Solo Performance by Brenda Bynum

PRESIDING: Jamil Zainaldin, Georgia Humanities Council

This one-woman play is drawn largely from Smith’s unpublished autobiographical writings by the prominent Atlanta actress and playwright Brenda Bynum. The name of an African-American spiritual, “Jordan is So Chilly,” was Smith’s original title for Strange Fruit, her best-selling but controversial 1944 novel about interracial love. This year marks the 70th anniversary of its publication. The hour-long play will be followed by an audience discussion with Ms. Bynum.

Co-sponsored by the Georgia Humanities Council and Piedmont College.

Saturday, November 15: 8:00 P.M.

Margaret Mitchell House

Sponsored by the Atlanta History Center, the University of Georgia’s History Department and Willson Center for Humanities and Arts, and the Woodruff Library at Emory University

Georgia Public Broadcasting’s Rickey Bevington hosts a stellar line-up of local scholars, poets, artists, and musicians in a far-reaching roundtable discussion of the coincidental anniversaries of the 1864 Battles of Atlanta and 1964 Civil Rights Act. Panelists include Poet Laureate Natasha Trethewey; artist Robert Morris; singer-songwriter Caroline Herring; and historians Robert Pratt, Brett Gadsden, and Joseph Crespino. Come join this important public forum on how our divisive past can be transformed into collective meaning.

A cocktail reception will follow. This session will be held at the Margaret Mitchell House, located at 990 Peachtree St NE. Robert Morris’s “Slavery by Another Name” exhibit will be on display. Transportation will be provided. Reserve a bus seat at the SHA registration table when you arrive in Atlanta.
